Auditory Processing Disorder (APD) Testing

Auditory processing disorder (APD), also known as central auditory processing disorder (CAPD), is a condition that impacts the brain's ability to filter and interpret sounds. People with APD can hear, but have a hard time receiving, organizing, and processing auditory information. APD often emerges in childhood as the difficulty of their schooling increases. Children with APD will typically begin showing signs of increased struggles as they work to keep up with these new challenges.

- APD prevents someone from easily understanding a spoken message leading to trouble recognizing sounds in words and/or mix up sounds and words completely.
- APD symptoms heighten in the presence of background noise.
- APD is independent from hearing loss and intelligence.
- APD can impact people of all ages, and in different ways.
- The management of APD is dependent on which process(es) are disordered, but may include a combination of environmental modifications, compensatory strategies, and assistive listening devices.
- To determine if someone has APD, hearing loss must first be ruled out as a contributing factor.

Contact RHSC to schedule an appointment and learn more about APD: Call (585) 721-0681, email info@rhsc.org, or fill out our Contact Us Form.
