"All learning is a direct result of the connections we make. When the connections between teacher and student are NOT aligned the result is a lack of focus, disengagement and negative behavior. Learning is derailed. When we take into consideration the developmental challenges of a student through the lens of relationship, development, and individual differences we are able to understand and modify and as result connections are made, and learning is successful."

Jackie Bartell, MEd, Expert DIRFloortime® Practitioner and Trainer

ABOUT INFO SESSION

DIRFloortime® is an evidence-based model that helps us promote healthy development and is especially powerful in helping children on the autism spectrum or with other developmental or emotional challenges. The DIRFloortime® model builds a healthy foundation for social, emotional, and intellectual capacities rather than focusing exclusively on skills and isolated behaviors. It is a model that is being used around the world.

This session will explain some of the barriers and supportive solutions toward connected learning through a developmental lens with a focus on relationship and individual differences. It will also showcase some amazing success stories!

WHO SHOULD ATTEND?

Educators, SLPs, OTs, PTs, psychologists, counselors, social workers, child care workers, mental health professionals, physicians, other human service professionals, students, and parents.

The Interdisciplinary Council on Development and Learning is the Home of DIR® and DIRFloortime®

This workshop is made possible thanks to a grant from the Golisano Foundation.
