“All learning is a direct result of the connections we make. When the connections between teacher and student are NOT aligned the result is a lack of focus, disengagement and negative behavior. Learning is derailed. When we take into consideration the developmental challenges of a student through the lens of relationship, development, and individual differences we are able to understand and modify and as result connections are made, and learning is successful.”

ABOUT WORKSHOP

This 12- hour virtual workshop through Zoom will review the theoretical framework, scientific evidence, and scope of application of the DIR model and Floortime. We will develop an introductory understanding of the barriers and supportive solutions toward connected learning through a developmental lens with a focus on relationship and individual differences. DIRFloortime® has a strong research base to support its effectiveness in improving the core challenges of autism including relating, interacting, and communicating.
